I was sent to the boarding school in 1972. I remember being brought up to this place that looked like a castle. The first day I went was with friends I still have now. It was their parents who took me. There were a couple of nuns there when we arrived. They didn't feel friendly and didn't make us feel welcome. It was all new to me. I just remember the nuns weren't very nice. I was upset, but they didn't comfort us. I felt abandoned, and I was only young. It was just tough.

I played the violin and piano, and I was very good. Whenever I made a mistake, I'd get battered in the back and pulled around the place. I was offered a scholarship in my teens to do music but I had to turn it down. The trauma that place left me with, made me unable to follow my dreams with the worries of being abused again.

We were left to go for days without eating proper food, where we were only given stale bread. I'll also never forget the smell of semolina pudding. I can't smell it now. We were made to eat it, and if we didn't, we'd get nothing and get battered again. Sister Celine would get a big ladle and go over my knuckles. I remember us being left out before where we ended up drinking dirty water and eating grass due to the hunger. There was one lady, kitchen staff, who would give children some food if they looked hungry or slightly scruffy. The horrible nuns found out, and gave her a beating.

We used to get hair grips put in our ears, and we had to wash carbolic soap in our mouths, and brush our teeth with it. They would yank your hair and pull it out.

It was all physical and mental abuse, with religion being pushed on us through a lot of threats. If we didn't do our prayers, or what I was told, we were physically or verbally threatened. I was told once that they'd put me in the furnace and no one would know. We would be in the toilet and they'd batter us without any reason. It was just constant torment. I used to make my nose bleed to be sent up to my room as they would hide all of our gifts in this little cupboard that was nearby. I started stealing when I had the chance. I was getting hit anyway, so I thought I may as well get hit for a reason. When parents came to visit, they'd put on a show to make everything seem good. They took advantage of the fact that some parents couldn't visit, so they took it out on us even more. There was a time there was four of us in a bath. One girl accidentally pulled on sister Celine's clothes. She didn't like this so she held her head under the water. It was all physical and mental abuse, with religion being pushed on us through a lot of threats. I never actually got a proper education. I have been left with long term health issues caused by the malnutrition I experienced. There are smells that haunt me and I never got to follow my dream of music.
