Aberdeen

I was placed with the first foster carers when I was about six. It was a horrible place full. I remember taking a cigarette from my foster carer's pocket before I went outside to play. When I came back, he said that two cigarettes were missing and accused my brother of taking them. None of us were allowed to leave until someone admitted what had happened.

The female carer, Helen, took me upstairs and told me that if I admitted taking the cigarettes, I would not "get a hiding." I believed her, so I admitted it. Instead, she punched me repeatedly and beat me severely. It was a full physical attack.

At the time, I thought it was normal for children to receive a small slap for misbehaving, as that was more common in the 1970s. However, what happened to me went far beyond that. The violence was extreme and completely unacceptable.

My sister was also physically assaulted, I witnessed this and she witnessed what happened to me. The abuse was constant, and we lived in fear of being beaten. I get constant nightmares and flashbacks of seeing this.

Me and my brother were separated from my sister when I was around the age of 11. She stayed there and we were moved. My siblings were my source of comfort and stability, and having that taken away from me was devastating. I did not see my sister again for approximately two to three years, and the separation left me feeling isolated, abandoned, and heartbroken.

I still think about these incidents all the time. They continue to affect me, and I regularly suffer from nightmares about what happened.

Newmachar, Aberdeenshire

Me and my brother were placed in another home. I was around age 11. We were placed in a house in the countryside that had once been an old minister's mansion. Although it was a large, three-storey house, me and my brother were made to live in the basement. It was cold, dark, and frightening. There were wooden shutters instead of curtains, I regularly saw mice, and I never felt safe or comfortable there. I still get constant nightmares of waking up in this place.

During this placement, I wet the bed, which I believe was a response to the fear and distress I was experiencing. Instead of being comforted, I was made to wash my own bedsheets every morning before school but was not allowed to wash myself afterwards. I went to school feeling humiliated and dirty. My foster carer accused me of doing it deliberately and even said that I enjoyed it. This left me feeling ashamed and humiliated. I still suffer from nightmares about this time.

A social worker visited me and asked how I was feeling, but I found it impossible to talk. On one occasion, she asked me to write my feelings down instead. I remember writing, "I don't want to be here anymore." That was the only way I could express how desperate and unhappy I felt.

After that, my brother and I were separated. That had a huge impact on me and caused me to rebel because all I wanted was to be with my siblings.

Throughout this placement, I experienced constant emotional and psychological trauma. I felt isolated, unsupported, and blamed rather than cared for, and the impact of those experiences has stayed with me into adulthood.
