When I was at Polmont, on my first day when I was having my dinner, I was carrying my dinner tray and was tripped up by another inmate as he wanted to make fun of me and sit by his friends laughing at me. This made me feel quite down and especially on my first day I was humiliated straight away. This wasn't a nice feeling and made me feel very small.

I remember encountering some heavy physical abuse. I was kicked, punched and pushed around, not on a daily basis but it happened often enough for me to still remember it to this day. The guards here used to shout at us quite a lot, they used to restrain me quite heavily and acted in packs towards us young boys.

I was always targeted with my bed sheets for other inmates to use as a swing so they could swing from cell to cell and it was always mine that they used, they never used to ask anybody else.

We was always strip searched and they would get me to squat and then laugh at me and this made me feel embarrassed about the situation as I was just trying to do as I was told.

I was then transported to Glenochil and this wasn't a nice setting either.

When the guards used to do cell checks, if they found the smallest of dust particles, they would make us do press ups and put there boots on our backs to make it harder as a severe punishment for the small of things.

The guards here used to make fun of me here when i would go for a strip search as well. I understand this probably happened in most places but for a young boy this wasn't a nice feeling and being isolated and no one to turn to this was a lot of emotion to handle.

I was a little older when being placed at Longriggend I realised I was around more high risk inmate which had me on edge everyday. I was in detention for minor offences whilst being around murderers, attempted murders and people who was in for serious assault. I used to walk around with constant fear thinking something was going to happen to me and i was always looking over my shoulder. The night time was more scary as that's when the attacks used to happen to people.

In Longriggend, the big boys used to come in to my cell and take whatever they could without asking. They used to make me buy them things and force me in to it without really giving me an option of saying no. They knew they could bully me as i was one of the youngest in here at the time.

They used to tease me and laugh when they'd taken my stuff.
