I was placed into Good Shepherd when I was a teenager. It felt like a prison. The doors were locked, the windows had bars on them, and we were not free to leave. After everything I had already been through with my mother, being placed there was terrifying. I remember being put into a room with two other girls. At night, after we had been sent to bed, we were locked in and couldn't get out. Staff would carry out room inspections before we went to sleep. It was always a man who came in. He would open our underwear drawers and ask us which underwear we were going to wear the next day, making comments like, "Oh, these ones are nice." It made us feel deeply uncomfortable, but we were too frightened to say anything. We stayed quiet because we were scared of the consequences of speaking up. I remember one girl who would answer back or challenge the staff. She would get battered for it. We could hear her screaming, and that was enough to make the rest of us keep quiet. There were always different male staff coming into our rooms, usually at night. It started with inappropriate comments about our underwear, then they began touching us, lifting us up and trying to kiss us. It eventually led to me being sexually abused. Some of the other girls experienced it repeatedly as well, one ended up pregnant. There was an underground room that we were told was part of our schooling. It had a stage, and we were made to dress up, put on make-up and use props to perform what we were told were plays. Looking back now, I realise it was completely inappropriate. We were being made to entertain the male staff in a sexualised way. At the time, I didn't understand what was really happening. Because it was a closed unit and the room was downstairs, nobody ever seemed to check what was going on. We were supposed to be receiving an education, but instead much of it involved being taken down into that basement with the stage. I will never forget the smell of the curtains hanging there. That smell has stayed with me all my life. I can still picture those curtains opening with me standing on that stage, feeling vulnerable, exposed and exploited. Those memories continue to haunt me to this day.

We were constantly starved, hurt and neglected. We were treated as though we did not matter.

Eventually, I could not take it anymore. I took myself to the Children's Panel because I desperately wanted to get out. My grandad helped me by getting me a solicitor. I told them everything that had been happening to me. Instead of protecting me, they put me into an even worse situation than the one I was trying to escape. It felt like nobody was listening to me, despite everything I had been through. I had to keep screaming from the rooftops before anyone would even begin to hear me.

I feel that Social Services completely failed me throughout my childhood. I was taken from my mother's care when I was three years old after she and her partner were sent to prison. They did not provide the names of any family members who could care for me because they did not want anyone to know they had been imprisoned. As far as I am aware, Social Services did not make any attempts to identify or contact my wider family to see if anyone was willing or able to look after me. Instead, I was moved between different foster families and care settings. When my mother was released from prison, I was returned to her care. She was a severe alcoholic and regularly left me abandoned. My home life was chaotic, unsafe and unstable. Social Services were aware of my circumstances and knew that I was living in an environment where my needs were not being met, yet they failed to intervene or protect me. I spent most of my childhood, simply trying to survive. Looking back, I feel that I was repeatedly let down by the very people who were supposed to keep me safe. Rather than receiving the protection and stability I desperately needed, I was left to endure neglect and instability, and I continue to live with the consequences of those failures today.
