I was very young when this happened, and I feel that I was failed, along with my siblings. It began on Duke Street in Glasgow, where everything changed. They arrived in a minibus and took me away while my siblings watched. I can still remember my mum screaming and crying, begging for us to be returned to her. That moment has stayed with me ever since, and it had an immediate and lasting impact on my mental health from the very beginning. I felt terrified, confused, and completely powerless.

Straight away, I was separated from my siblings. That was one of the most painful parts of the experience. We were all we had, and suddenly they were gone. I was left feeling completely alone and petrified. I was taken to Maxton Children's Home, where there was no empathy or comfort shown to me at all. When I arrived, staff dragged me to a room on my own, left me at the door, and walked away. There was no reassurance, no kindness—just abandonment. Having my siblings taken from me like that broke my heart.

The staff in the home were very aggressive, stressed, and often nasty in the way they spoke to me. I was surrounded by adults and older children, some around 16 years old, who would bully me and treat me badly. I was very young and vulnerable, and I had no way to defend myself. The older children would hurt me, kick me, and intimidate me on a daily basis. I felt like I had no choice but to accept this treatment, as there was no one there to protect me or listen to me.

The staff were also very physical with me. They would restrain me in painful ways, sitting on me, hitting me, and bending my arms back. At the time, I didn't understand that this was wrong—I was made to believe that this was normal behaviour. They would shout at me, make fun of me, and treat me without any care or dignity. I was often kept in my room for long periods, sometimes feeling like it was 24 hours a day, isolated and alone with my fear and distress.

This environment affected me very badly, both mentally and physically. I lived in constant fear. If we ever tried to escape, the punishments were severe. We would be attacked and then taken to the police station, but what was done to us beforehand—the beatings and the abuse—was never properly reported or acknowledged. It made me feel completely trapped, as if there was no way out and no one who would help me.

I was there for about a year, and during that time I suffered continuously. That period marked the beginning of my long-term struggles with my mental health. The trauma I experienced in that place has stayed with me throughout my life. I continue to suffer from the emotional and psychological effects of what happened, as well as the physical impact of the abuse I endured. It has affected how I see the world, how I trust people, and how I cope day to day.

Looking back now, I can see clearly that I was a vulnerable child who needed care, protection, and support—but instead, I experienced fear, violence, and neglect. The impact of those experiences has been profound and long-lasting, shaping my mental health and affecting my life to this day.
