At the age of fourteen, I was sent to Rimbleson Children's Home because I was considered out of parental control. I spent a year there. During my time in Rimbleson, I was regularly restrained with force. Two grown male adults would twist my arms up behind my back and force me to the ground. My wrists were often left painful after these incidents, which happened at least once a week. Following this, I would be locked in my room for hours at a time. The staff were verbally abusive. They portrayed me as misbehaving and being a nuisance, even when I was not. On one occasion, I was strip-searched by male staff. I was made to remove all of my clothes while they searched my room. I often ran away, but each time the police brought me back, I was restrained again with force. I also witnessed other children being assaulted by staff members. I was never allowed home during my time there. My parents visited, but I could only see them when they came to the home or when I ran away. I had no home visits. Much of what happened I cannot fully remember, as I believe I have blocked parts of it out.

After Rimpleton, I spent time in Polmont, Longriggend, and Glenochil. I cannot recall the exact length of time in each, but I suffered abuse in all of them, particularly in Glenochil.

In these institutions, I was assaulted by staff. I was slapped on the head, restrained with force, and subjected to constant verbal abuse. I was belittled and made to feel worthless. If I spoke out of line, I would be slapped daily.

In Glenochil, I was locked up without food or access to a bathroom. If I refused to participate in exercise, a day was added to my sentence. I lost many days this way, even though it was illegal for staff to extend a sentence, as only a judge has that authority. Nevertheless, this happened to me.

I had no proper bathroom access and was forced to use a bucket in my cell.

My time in these places has had a massive impact on my life. I lost trust in authority. I continue to struggle with mental health and with everyday life. I felt unsupported, as the constant message drilled into me was that I was worthless and useless.
