I was only there for a short period, but it felt like being in a maximum security prison. From the moment I arrived, I was locked in my room so I couldn't go out at all. That was my reality all day, every day. I wasn't allowed to leave my room for anything other than the bare minimum, and the isolation became overwhelming. It drove me to the edge mentally. Being shut away like that, with no freedom and no contact, made me feel trapped in a way that is hard to describe.

I wasn't allowed to play outside, and I wasn't allowed to see anyone, even on weekends. I remember hearing other people outside, playing and living their lives, while I was kept inside my room as if I had done something wrong. It made me feel forgotten and punished, even though I hadn't done anything to deserve it. The loneliness and the sense of being cut off from everyone else were incredibly painful.

The lack of freedom and the constant confinement had a huge emotional impact on me. It made me feel small, powerless, and completely isolated. I felt like I didn't matter, like my needs or feelings weren't important to anyone. Being locked away like that, day after day, changed the way I saw myself and the world around me. It created a deep sense of fear and mistrust that has stayed with me.

Even though my time there was short, the experience left a lasting mark on me. The isolation, the lack of human contact, and the feeling of being trapped affected me mentally in ways I am still dealing with. It wasn't just being confined physically — it was the emotional impact of being shut away, ignored, and denied any sense of normal childhood life. Those memories have stayed with me, and they continue to affect me to this day.

Your statement for Care setting 2 continued

My time in Coylton was horrific. There was one occasion when one of the students set a fire, and instead of handling the situation safely or appropriately, the staff stripped us all naked and locked us in our rooms so we couldn't go anywhere. I remember feeling terrified, confused, and completely humiliated. It was as though we were being punished for something we had no control over, and the way they treated us made me feel less than human. That moment has stayed with me because of how exposed and powerless I felt.

The physical abuse was constant. They would hit me and "restrain" me, but it was never just restraining. It was painful, aggressive, and frightening. I was hurt more than once, and over time it became something I almost expected. There was no sense of safety — only the fear of when it would happen again. The way they handled us was not about control or protection; it was about intimidation and punishment. It left me feeling scared, small, and completely alone.

I was also a witness to other children being abused all the time. The boys, especially, seemed to get it even worse. I remember seeing them being beaten until they were black and blue. Watching that happen to others was deeply distressing. It made the environment feel even more dangerous because it showed me that no one was safe. Seeing other children suffer like that left a lasting emotional mark on me, because I knew exactly how it felt and I couldn't help them.

I was also witness to one of the boys being sexually abused. That memory has never left me. Even though it didn't happen to me directly in that moment, witnessing it was traumatic. It added another layer of fear and helplessness to everything I was already experiencing. It showed me just how unsafe we all were.

All of this had a huge mental impact on me. It has made me much more timid and nervous later in life. The fear, the humiliation, and the constant threat of abuse shaped the way I saw myself and the world around me. These experiences didn't end when I left Coylton — they followed me into adulthood. I have still not fully recovered from what happened there, and the emotional effects continue to stay with me.

Your statement for Care setting 3 continued

I was made to get down on my knees and scrub the floors simply because I was a day pupil. It felt degrading and humiliating, and I remember feeling as though I was being punished for something completely out of my control. It was made very clear to me that I was treated differently from the others, and that difference was used against me.

They would lock me up in a small, dingy room, and the feeling of being shut away like that was frightening. The room itself felt cold and unwelcoming, and being kept there made me feel isolated and powerless. I remember the fear of not knowing how long I would be left there or what would happen next. It created a constant sense of anxiety that stayed with me long after I left.

They were very mean to me. They would shout at me, scream at me, and hit me. The mistreatment felt relentless. It wasn't just physical — it was emotional and psychological as well. Every time they raised their voices or laid their hands on me, it reinforced the message that I didn't belong and that I wasn't safe. I felt constantly on edge, waiting for the next outburst or punishment.

A big part of the way they treated me was because I was not a Christian. They made that very clear. I was treated differently because of my religious beliefs, and it made me feel singled out and targeted. Instead of being supported or understood, I was judged and punished for something that should never have mattered. That discrimination left a deep emotional impact on me. It made me feel small, unwanted, and ashamed of who I was.

All of these experiences combined had a lasting effect on me. The shouting, the hitting, the isolation, and the discrimination shaped the way I saw myself and the world around me. Even now, I still carry the emotional weight of how I was treated. The fear, the humiliation, and the sense of being "othered" have stayed with me, and they continue to affect me in ways I am still trying to work through.
