When I think back to my time in care, one of the most frightening experiences I endured was the physical abuse from Peter McNally. There was a moment that has stayed with me ever since: he grabbed me by the ankles from behind while I was standing, sweeping me off my feet with no warning. I was slammed onto the floor, and the shock of it left me terrified and in pain. Another incident happened when I was looking out of a window that had no safety locks. I fell out and broke both of my heels and injured my back. These events were not accidents — they were the result of neglect and a complete lack of care for my safety and wellbeing.

Alongside the physical abuse, I also experienced sexualised behaviour from the other two carers. They would smack my bum, make inappropriate sexual comments, and behave in ways that no child should ever be exposed to. I wasn't the only one who suffered this. I witnessed them doing the same to other girls in the home. They would wait for us to come out of the shower so they could watch us, making us feel exposed, uncomfortable, and powerless. As a child, I didn't fully understand what was happening, but I knew it was wrong. I knew it made me feel unsafe in a place where I was supposed to be protected.

These experiences have had a lasting impact on my life. I now struggle with anxiety and periods of severe depression. The memories of what happened don't just disappear — they affect how I see the world, how I trust people, and how I cope day to day. The fear, the humiliation, and the lack of safety I felt as a child have followed me into adulthood. Even now, I find myself dealing with the emotional consequences of what was done to me.
