During my time at Cardross, it was awful. When we were there, they would only take us out of the house once or twice a week, and the rest of the time we were kept inside. I was only 13 at the time, and the whole environment felt frightening. Staff would come in and scream and shout at me, and as a young teenager it was extremely intimidating. I remember feeling constantly on edge, never knowing when someone was going to come in and start shouting again.

They used to force us to clean up, and even if I didn't want to, they would make me do it. There was no choice, no discussion — just orders and threats. There were also several times when, if they didn't like what I said or how I reacted, they would "restrain" me. But it wasn't restraint. They would pin me down, put their knee in my neck so I couldn't breathe properly, and twist my arms and legs behind me. I remember the panic of not being able to move or breathe. There was one time they literally threw me into my room face first. They would punch and kick me as well. It was awful and completely unnecessary.

There were also times when, if I said I didn't like what was being served for food, they would make me go without. If I didn't want to eat something, then I simply didn't eat. It felt like punishment for having normal preferences, and it added to the feeling that I had no control over anything in my life.

Even though I was only there for a short amount of time, it has had a massive impact on my mental health. The shouting, the violence, the fear, and the lack of safety stayed with me long after I left. In later life, I have struggled with things like leaving the house and feeling comfortable in everyday situations. The experiences at Cardross affected my confidence, my sense of safety, and the way I saw the world. What happened there didn't just affect me in the moment — it shaped my life moving forward, and I am still dealing with the emotional consequences today. Roslyn Walker was the social worker who made me endure this and put me in ther e
