When I was placed into Bellfield House children's home, I was only around 12 to 13 years old, and the experience left a lasting impact on me. From the moment I arrived, the staff made it clear that I had no freedom. They wouldn't let me leave my room, and I was placed in a home with much older kids, which made everything feel even more intimidating. I remember feeling trapped, isolated, and completely powerless. The staff were horrible to me, and there was no sense of care or safety. What made it even worse was witnessing the care workers touching up the young boys. We saw it happening right in front of us. As a child, seeing that and knowing there was no one to protect us was terrifying. I felt neglected, ignored, and deeply unsafe during my time there.

Later, when I went to live with Linda Macarlam and James Mortimer, I stayed there for about three to four years. At first, things seemed alright, and I thought I might finally have some stability. But it didn't take long before everything changed. I found out that Linda had a serious drinking problem. She would disappear, leaving the family home for long periods, and I was left alone with her husband. That created a completely different kind of fear for me. They wouldn't let me leave the house, and her husband's behaviour made me extremely uncomfortable. He acted strangely around me, and there were nights when he would try to come into my room. He would try to touch me while I was asleep, and I remember lying there frozen, not knowing what to do or who to tell. I was still just a child, and I didn't feel safe in what was supposed to be a family environment.

Eventually, I knew I had to leave because the situation had become too weird, too frightening, and too unsafe. Looking back, both placements left me feeling like I had no control over my own life. I was constantly put in situations where adults abused their power, and I had no voice. These experiences shaped me in ways I'm still trying to understand, but they also explain why I struggled, why I shut down emotionally, and why trust has always been difficult for me.
